The Movie Reviewer

KidsPost Article: "Critical Thinking: What's a Movie Reviewer Do Anyway?"

Lesson: Write a movie review

Level: Beginning to Advanced

Subjects: English, Language Arts, Reading

Related Activity: Mathematics

Procedure

Read and Discuss

Read the interview with Washington Post movie critic Desson Howe. What does a movie critic do? What training did Howe have to become a movie reviewer? Why would The Washington Post include movie reviews?

Take a Trivia Quiz

We have provided you eight questions for a trivia quiz. Please note that the answers are on the sheet for your benefit. For the age of your students, you will have to decide how much information to give. For example, for the youngest students, the dates may be left in number one and the amounts of money may be left for number two. A test of numerical ordering with data would not be the same challenge for older students; delete the dates and amounts. Question 8 is open-ended. Use it as a lead into giving opinion and backing that opinion with specific examples.

Analyze What You Know

When movies are based upon a book, readers have expectations. Ask students who have read Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone to tell what they expected the movie to include. Read "A 'Potter' Preview," a look at what appears in the movie and what has disappeared in the screen version (http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-srv/entertainment/movies/features/potterfeature.htm). If students have seen the movie, do they agree with the director's decisions? What scenes are better left to the reader's imagination?

Discuss movie genres. What are the characteristics of movies in these genre?

Adventure, comedy, fantasy, science fiction, superhero, war, western. Can students name the best films in each category? What are Academy Award winners in each genre?

Expectations based upon the book and the genre can influence the review a movie receives.

Evaluate

Analyze the information he included and the order in which he presented it.

Give students "Guidelines for Movie Review Writers." Use these

Film Vocabulary

Action

"Action" is called during filming to indicate the start of the current take.

Actor, Actress

A person who plays the role of a character. Historically, the term "Actor" refered exclusively to males, but in modern times the term is used for both genders.

Animation (also Animated, Animator)

The process of creating the illusion of motion by creating individual frames, as opposed to filming naturally-occurring action at a regular frame rate

Close-up

A shot in which the subject is larger than the frame, revealing much detail.

Costume

The clothes worn by actors when being filmed.

Director

The principal creative artist on a movie set. A director is usually (but not always) the driving artistic source behind the filming process, and communicates to actors the way that he/she would like a particular scene played. A director's duties might also include casting, script editing, shot selection, shot composition, and editing.

Editing (also Visual Editing, Film Editing)

Reconstructing the sequence of events in a movie

Lighting

Most productions use artificial lighting when filming for various technical and artistic reasons, both on location or on a set.
guidelines to evaluate the movie and to write the review.

Establish a Format
It would be helpful to establish a format for the movie review. You might want to use the Washington Post format. This is good training. If students are submitting for publication, they need to follow the format of the publication. If students will be submitting their reviews to your school's newspaper, use the format of that publication.

Give a Rating
Your class could devise its own rating system or symbols. Go to VideoHound Ratings for possible categories (http://www.moviegoods.com/popratings.html). Or go to the Motion Picture Association of America's Movie Ratings (http://www.mpaa.org movieratings) where you can learn how the rating system works and search a movie's rating. Have students think about standards before they write their reviews.

Write a Movie Review
Either show a movie in class or ask students to select a movie to review.

Share
Ask students to read their movie reviews aloud or publish them on a bulletin board. If several students have reviewed the same movie, they could read point-counterpoint. Students could be movie critics on a television or radio show discussing the reasons they give the movie a positive or negative rating. If your school has a student newspaper, submit the best movie reviews for publication consideration.

Enrichment
Think about the mathematics and finances involved in the movie industry. Use "Movie Math" for articles and questions for discussion.

Moviegoer
One who goes to see movies.

Point of View (also POV)
A camera angle in which the camera views what would be visible from a particular object's position.

Scene
A continuous block of storytelling either set in a single location or following a particular character. The end of a scene is typically marked by a change in location, style, or time.

Script
A general term for a written work detailing story, setting, and dialogue. A script may take the form of a screenplay, shooting script, lined script, continuity script, or a spec script.

Set
An environment used for filming. When used in contrast to location, it refers to one artificially constructed.

Sound Effects
Sounds added during post-production by the sound crew.

Special Effects (also SFX)
An artificial effect used to create an illusion in a movie. Refers to effects produced on the set, as opposed to those created in post-production (visual effects).

Guidelines for Movie Review Writers

Know your purpose
You are helping moviegoers to make a decision. Individuals cannot afford to go to every movie that opens. Some movies are not appropriate for all audiences. Some movies can only be appreciated on the large screen. While some movies are worth viewing, they are not worth the price of the box office ticket. These are the ones that should be viewed when they come to television or on video.

Don't hide your opinion
People are reading your movie review to know your opinion. Don't be afraid to state it.

Use a format
Where does the title of the movie appear? What information is included at the end of each review for quick reference? Readers want to read the review quickly. Give them the information they need.

Know the basics
Title, producer, director, rating, distributor, running time can be found on official movie Web sites.

Know your audience
Use vocabulary that your readers will understand. The tone of your review can reflect the type of movie and your publication. If you want to compare this movie to other movies, be sure your readers are likely to have seen or heard of the movie; otherwise, give information to help them to understand the comparison.

Know the genre
Is this a good example of the genre?

Know the actors, actresses and director
When writing about characters' actions, don't confuse the characters with the actors who are portraying them. Actors' names often appear in parenthesis. Include the names of leading actors and actresses and evaluate how well they played their roles. Include other movies directed by the director if they help to understand his approach or expectations viewers have of his movies.

Summarize the plot, but don't tell the ending
This is not as true when a movie is based upon a book or play. If the movie has a different ending, don't tell.

Select a scene
Is there a scene that captures the spirit of the story? A scene that demonstrates lighting and cinematography as well as acting?

Read Desson Howe's online review of "Monsters, Inc." Look for actors' names; characters' names, appearance and qualities; and plot summary. Do you think Howe likes the movie?

In a hidden world inhabited by monsters of every shape and size, grizzly faced James "Sulley" Sullivan (voiced by John Goodman) and his one-eyed blob of a Scare Assistant, Mike Wazowski (Billy Crystal), work at Monsters, Inc., a utility company that harnesses energy from the fear of children. Sulley and Wazowski are part of the plant's front line, busting into kids' rooms, scaring them and producing a bounty of terror. Sulley's a monster among monsters. He's always topping the kudos list for most screams generated. But a treacherous, chameleon-like rival named Randall Boggs (Steve Buscemi) is threatening to knock Sulley from the No. 1 spot. That rivalry recedes temporarily into the background when young Boo (Mary Gibbs)—oblivious to the scariness of the monsters—wanders into her closet and straight into the monster dimension.

Checklist
- My opinion is clearly stated. Readers know whether I recommend they buy a ticket, wait for the video or just read the book.
- I have given specific examples to support my point of view.
- I have used the right tone and vocabulary for my readers.
- I have included a summary of the action.
- I have not revealed the ending of the movie.
- I have included something about actors, actresses and director.
- I have included something about the costumes, special effects and lighting.
- I have included something about camera work.
- I have used correct punctuation and spelling.
- I have used the correct format.
- I have been honest.
Movie Math

You may think this is about buying a ticket or renting a video to see a film. Movie math is more than the price you pay for a ticket or the cost of a video.

Be a critical reader
If you take time to read the blurbs about movies, you have made an advertising company and movie distributor happy. You might be persuaded to buy a ticket. Read “This Story is Great!” John Kelly tells you about blurbs. Have you ever read a blurb that is negative?

Where should you look for other sources of information before you spend your money?

Be a critical viewer
J.K. Rowling insisted there be no product placement in the movie. She wanted her movie to reflect the British boarding school life and not have subliminal messages to buy certain products. As you view other movies look for the cars that are driven, the candy that is eaten and other products that are present. Think about it. What candy appears in “E.T., the Extra-Terrestrial”?

Why would a company want its product to appear in a movie?

Be a critical consumer
You can order the official Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone interactive game or sip Coke from a Harry Potter can. Marketing of Harry Potter book-related Profits from the Harry Potter movie could soar to hundreds of millions of dollars for the movie's producer, Warner Bros.

In the Money

Advance
Of payment: an amount given before receipt of services. Of a composite print: the distance between a point on the soundtrack and the corresponding image.

Advertisement
A notice, such as a poster, newspaper display or paid announcement in the electronic media, designed to attract public attention or patronage.

Agent
A manager responsible for the professional business dealings of an actor, director, or other artist.

Blockbuster
A well-known film that makes a lot of money.

Blurbs
Excerpts from reviews written by movie critics. Used to encourage readers to attend films.

Endorsement
Approval or support through a public statement. Endorsement can be implied; for example, an athlete’s appearance in an advertisement gives encouragement to buy the product.

Hit
A successful or popular venture.

Licensing
Agreement that gives the right to use the name and image

Merchandise
(noun) Goods bought and sold in business. (verb) To promote the sale of, as by advertising or display

Movie Rights
A contract that is negotiated to give permission to make a movie based upon a book or script.

Product Placement
A company pays to have its product used in a film as props. For example, the cars driven, the soft drink consumed, the brand of tennis shoes worn can be advertising for a product seamlessly included in the flow of the movie.

Series (also Franchise)
A sequence of films with continuing characters or themes, but with little other interdependence, especially with respect to plot or significant character development.

Word Study: A look at movie lingo

A movie reviewer is often a film buff. A Harry Potter buff is someone who is enthusiastic and knowledgeable about all things in the books and movie.

This meaning of buff originated around 1920. People then liked New York firefighters as much as we do in 2001. New York volunteer firemen wore buff-colored uniforms. Someone who had a strong interest in fire fighting and fires was called a buff.

A film buff would certainly know who is the star of the movie. The star gets top billing on movie posters. The star's name is larger and comes before the names of other actors and actresses in film credits. The star has the leading role. If a movie reviewer thinks someone with a minor role did a better job acting, the star is not happy. The star wants to shine above all others.

A star would not ordinarily want a small part in a film. When director Michael Anderson was trying to get many famous actors to play small, or bit, parts in "Around the World in 80 Days," he told actors he wanted them to play cameo roles. A cameo is a carving in a gem or shell in relief. Although small, the cameo can be very delicate and valuable. Anderson got the stars he wanted.

You know that a pan can be used for cooking or frying. Romans and Greeks had words for it: In Latin it was patina, meaning shallow pan or platter, which came from Greek patanē. During the gold rush, prospectors would "pan for gold." A shallow pan was used for washing gold from gravel.

Miners used the expression to "pan out" when they found gold. Pan out also could refer to a mine or soil that held gold. For actors, a positive review is as good as gold. When the noun or verb is pan, the expression is changed to harsh criticism. When a movie critic gives a negative review, he pans the film.

If you are talking about the cinematography of a film, you may discuss the successful use of panning. This has nothing to do with gold or negative reviews. It has everything to do with visual effect. If the camera is rotated on its vertical axis to produce a panorama, the director of photography, or DP, has panned the shot.

The holy grail of movie lingo, the Hollywood sign in Hollywood Hills, Calif., has letters that are as tall as a 5-story building.
